

At the fast food restaurant

Yesterday, Katie and I went to Happy Fast Food Restaurant. We were thirsty and hungry so we ordered a packet of French fries, a hamburger and a can of cola. We were talking to each other happily. Suddenly, we heard someone talking loudly. He was talking so loudly that we couldn't talk with each other. We felt annoyed about the noise. We wanted to leave there.

When we finished eating our food, we wanted to go to the shopping mall. Suddenly, I found a pair of sunglasses on the table when we were leaving. I felt curious. I said, 'How can we find the man?' Katie said, 'I don't think so.' Then the employee of the restaurant said, 'Whose sunglasses are these?' I replied, 'I think they belong to the man who was talking loudly. We looked around to see if he was still there.

After that, we found the man. I said, 'Yes, that is the man.' Katie replies, 'Yes, that is.' We felt happy because we could find him. The man asked, 'Did anyone see my sunglasses? I left them on the table.' We ran there and said, 'Are these sunglasses yours?' The man replied, 'Yes, they're mine. Thank you very much.'

In the end, I learned that helping others is nice and makes people happy.
